Chicago. A protective tariff bolus was in-dispensible to carry Ponusylvania. The internal organization of that State could not be moved by any other medicine, and it is an inand free trade as the true principle in all other commodities. This, however, is a general virtue among protectionists, each regarding free trade as the true principle in every thing except his pernilar "vanity"—as Mr. Weller would call it—and protection as only justifiable in that, until "our infant manufacories" have acquired strength to go alone; or, as a temporary expedient, to offset the low wa-ges of the pauper labor of Europe—the theory being that all laborers are fully employed and wealthy here; and the difference in the cost of subsistence which cheap lands should cause, not being worthy of consideration.

Pennsylvania is very strenuous on protection. It is doubtful if even General Jack-son could have carried that State, if he had not expressed his views on this question, and with that boldness and decision which always characterized his expressions on political questions, declared himself in favor of a qudislans tariff" The enthusiann with which the banner of "Polk, Dallas and the Tariff of memory, and it is well understood that a protective tail must be appended to any ticket, to carry Pennsylvania, although it may be as incongruous as the banner of Buck, Breck and Free Kansas," which prevailed in that intelligent Commonwealth at the last Presidential election.

Penusylvania finds the duty of twenty-four per cent, quite inadequate to protect her iron and coal, even with the additional protection which the cost of three thousand miles freight furnishes. It is difficult to say how much the modesty of that State would permit her to nak, if the question were submitted to her. It is quite certain that it would be a rate that, if put in the platform, would sink the Republican party as effectually as if Pennsylvania iron were tied to its neck and it were lanched into the sea; and as there are no prophets going about now, making iron swim, its case would be essentially disposed of.3

But it was not to be expected that a State whose protective demands had been so easily satisfied, in the instances we have mentioned, was going to be lost for want of skill in a party which has such managers as "Old Blair of the Globe"-na Greeley calls him-and Greeley himself. Is any so unsophisticated as to suppose that a protective plank could not be contrived, which would satisfy Pennsylvania and all protectionists, while it would declare nothing that the most radical free trader could not subscribe to? If there is any such, let him read the following tariff plank in the Chicago platform:

"That, while providing revenue for the support of the General Government by duties upon imports, sound policy requires such an adjustment of these imposts as to encourage the development of the industrial interests of the development of the industrial interests of the whole country; and we commend that policy of national exchanges, which secures to the working men liberal wages, to agricul-ture remunerative prices, to mechanics and manufactures an adequate reward for their skill, labor, and enterprise, and to the mation commercial prosperity and independence."

It will be observed that the latter half of the resolution has no connection with the first half, and would answer just as well for a free trade as a protective platform, while it does not at all conflict with the first part of the resolution, which does not even declare that the Government should collect its revenue by a tariff on imports. Free trade is the natural condition of national exchanges. Every advocate of free trade argues that it will best develop all the interests of the country; that free trade will best "secure to the working men liberal wages, to agriculturists remunerative prices, to mechanics and manufacturers an adequate reward for their Protestantism is much more infections in skill, labor and enterprise, and to the nation commercial prosperity and independence. But does the resolution declare that protective duties are "that policy of national exchanges" which will work all these blessings? Not by the remotest implication. If so, duties would be a blessing, and the burdens of government the great source of national prosperity. But the converse of this rule also follows: if protective duties are not beneficial to the industrial interests of the respect for Providence, yet that which ap-whole country, they are the most unjusti- pears the hand of Godto one, seems the finger hable system of taxation for the support of Government that was ever devised by any government, either civilized or savage; a port of Government as the millionaires and Astors; and under which the cost of collecthe revenue, without counting the millions annually sunk in building custom-houses and in protecting the revenue. The resolution, however, does not disturb this question. There is nothing in it in favor of collecting our revenue by imports, nor in favor of discriminating duties to protect manufactures; but it says, "While providing revenue for the support of the general Government by duties upon imports, sound policy requires such an adjustment of their imports ar to encourage the development of the industrial interests of the whole country."

But does "sound policy" require a duty of thirty per cent, on sugar, or $15 a tun on bar iron, or $20 a tun on boiler and band, and hoop-iron, or $1 a tun on bitumenous coal, as is provided in the tariff bill now pending? Does any one believe that sound policy requires that thirty per cent, should be added to the price of any commodity which he has to buy? No party dare put in its platform a plain declaration in favor of protective duties. But Pennsylvania demanded it as indispensible to carry that State, and Pennsyl- —Chapter IV; "Ursula"—translated from the vania is satisfied; yet there is not even a de- French by Dr. M. E. Then the Republican platform and free trade as the true principle in all roared rallantly as a young lion. Now Democracy has split asunder in the effort to be delivered of a plain declaration, and the Republican party has produced an instrument which, by "governing the ventages" properly, and "giving it voice with the breath," discourse any tune that may be desired in

The Steam Plow at Carthage The steam-plow exhibition, which took grounds, deserves some more notice than it has received. Having for a few moments witnessed the workings of the machine, we will attempt to describe what we saw. The machine is: first, a light land-loco tive and tender, combined and made as compact as possible. Under the main body it is supported upon one wheel, say of three feet in diameter and four feet in breadth of tire. This wheel, being the driver, has blade-like projections upon its periphery to take hold the soil over which it passes. In front '42" swept that State, is also jet green in there are two wheels of, say, one foot in breadth, by the management of which the concern is steered, through the intervention of a wheel similar to that employed for a similar purpose upon water craft.

Suspended from davits at the rear of the engine, by means of chains, are a number of plows-in this case, we believe nine-by which the work is performed. One of the davits being considerably longer than the other, the suspended coulters are, by an ingenious contrivance, so fixed as to follow each other at the proper distance to admit each in its turn to throw the earth which it displaces into the farrow of its predecessor, These plows seem to be arranged in a manner to be easily controllable; and perform their work with much perfection. Handsomer furrows than it drew are seldom seen.

The machine under our inspection moved off briskly at the rate of about four miles an hour, and, to all appearance, is competent to that movement for any desirable length of time. It is manageable without difficulty, and, doubtless, under circumstances favorable to the employment of its engines, will be not only an efficient but an economical assistant in agricultural operations.

The circumstances are huge fields of uni form surface and free from obstructions. It would seem also to require a sward upon which to travel, as, upon mellow earth, it would probably make but poor progress. The proper place for the display of its powers is the prairies of the Great West, in the subduing of which it has, doubtless, in store many noble triumphs.

The inventor of the machine is a Mr. Fawkes; but how much he claims as his invention, we are not informed. Other steam plows are in operation, but how they differ from this we have no means to learn. The invention probably consists in some sup-posed-to-be peculiar adaptation or combinaposed-to-be peculiar adaptation or combina-tion of known powers and instrumentalities. To it Mr. Fawkes has given much labor and expense, for which, we sincerely hope, he will find a better pscuniary return than usually fulls to the lot of discoverers. The building was done, as we understand, at the extensive establishment of Mr. Greenwood.

Philosophy and Providence An evening paper in this city has discovered that the great Irish emigration to this country, now going on, is caused by Romish priests, who are alarmed by the great revivals which have taken place in Ireland, and "are contagion overtakes them." In view of the vastly greater proportion of Protestants in this country, one would suppose that unless Ireland than here, the emigration would be only-to use a homely phrase-jumping out of the frying-pan into the fire. A morning paper holds that these emigra-tions are the work of Providence, whose at tention is now chiefly devoted to making this a "gurreat kedintry," and who pinches the Irish with famine in order to bring them over here to furnish cheap labor on our railroads. Both these papers intend the most exalted pears the hand of God to one, seems the finger of the Romish Priest to the other.

The morning paper also discovered has week that it was the Irish admixture that system under which the wealth of the country gave American character its restless activity escapes its share of taxation, and the man of and enterprise; which is undoubtedly true. and enterprise; which is undoubtedly true, moderate income pays as much for the sup- with some slight qualification. In the first place, New Eugland is the seat and center of the restless activity and enteprise of tion alone is not less than ten per cent, of the American character-a part the most exempt from Irish emigration and admixture. In the next place, to attempt to propagate restless activity and enterprise in the English or Anglo-Saxon race by a cross of the Irish, or Anglo-Saxon race by a cross of the Irish, would be like carrying coals to Newcastle. The Irish peasant is not made uncomfortable at home by his restless activity and enterprise, but is contented and happy on a sufficiency of a coarse diet; and surely this emigration, when providentially pinched by famine, will not be alleged as evidence of their activity and enterprise.

Where philosophy is so loose, it is natural that religion should partake of the same quality, especially in a paper which assumes the right of free thought in religious matters.
